Market Introduction

During the post-epidemic period, the development of various industries has been affected to varying degrees. Food and drink as a daily necessity were slightly less affected. According to data, from January to June 2021, the national food industry revenue reached 996.288 billion yuan, a cumulative increase of 12.6%; The total profit of the industry reached 78.50 billion yuan, a cumulative increase of 10.4%. Compared to the same period, the food and beverage industry is still showing an upward trend, and the development trend is relatively stable. At the same time, the epidemic has catalyzed the emergence of new consumption trends in the food industry, and behind each trend lies a new track of billions of dollars.

Affected by the epidemic, consumers are paying more attention to their own health and food safety, and pursuing healthier diets. Functional food and beverage products that offer nutrition, beauty, mental and immune health, were welcomed by many consumers. Consumers choose products that enhance resistance, including vitamins and dietary supplements, weight management and herbal medicine/traditional products, etc.. This will drive development of related plant based, functional ingredients, as well as the protein substitute products.

At the same time, most consumers expressed concern about sugary drinks.

In the past year, the popularity of sugar-free, low-sodium foods and drinks has increased. Despite this, the demand for sugary drinks remained. Based on this desire, many food and beverage processors are required to focus on product growth and innovation while also taking into account consumers' needs for health and taste.

With China's continuing implementation of the "carbon neutral" and "carbon peak" goals, the traditional food and beverage industry, high energy consumption, low efficiency of the industrial model, is in urgent need of technological breakthroughs. As a result, businesses from all stages of the food and beverage supply chain are working to reduce their carbon footprint. The trend towards environmentally friendly and sustainable packaging will be even more pronounced in 2021 and beyond, with many food and beverage companies starting to use packaging materials that are recyclable or biodegradable or even edible, and plant-based plastic packaging or bioplastics will grow further.
