Market Introduction

The global beauty and personal care industry retail sales reached USD422.7 billion in 2020, and is expected to amount to USD487.1 billion in 2021, according to data from Euromonitor. It is estimated that by 2026, retail sales will reach USD558.12 billion, with a compound annual growth rate of 4.82%. The Asia-Pacific region is the largest market, followed by North America and Europe. China has become the second largest beauty and personal care market after the United States.

According to the latest data from the National Bureau of Statistics, the total retail sales of cosmetics in China reached RMB191.7 billion in the first half of 2021, a year-on-year increase of 26.6%. This shows growth at an average rate of over 10% for two consecutive years.

Despite the COVID-19 pandemic, the global beauty market has been able to maintain its resilience and vitality as start-up brands emerge. The prestige market and online channels are still the strongest pillars of beauty brands. Consumer demand for safety, efficacy, and sustainability is shaping a healthier market environment.

As to the future, Mintel's "2030 Global Beauty and Personal Care Trends" provides several forward-looking views:

First of all, consumers are becoming the dominant force in the market. Secondly, there will be stronger emphasis on transparency and environmental protection. Science and nature must support each other to satisfy consumers. Finally, the way consumers find, purchase, and interact with products will shift permanently. Consumers will return to off-line and the market will break the control of social media KOL.

In the China market, brand building and technology accumulation are becoming the key core competence. In addition to new ingredients and new technologies, the development of advanced science such as skin micro-ecology, emotional skin care, and brain reading technology is worthy of attention. At the same time, it is necessary to be aware of the new cosmetics regulations and the standardized management of e-commerce.
